

What is acceptable

Why is this OK?

It is a simple listing intended to inform the reader of industry awards and recognition. It does not imply endorsement, but rather informs the reader of documents and sites that include the vendor. This example uses the Gartner logo to link to a Gartner reprint, with access to the full report through the “Read the Report” link.

Also appropriate, the Gartner logo, text and link are clearly separate and distinct from other logos.

What is not acceptable

Why is this not OK?

This example does not reflect a simple listing of recognition, but instead shows the Gartner logo bundled with the other research firms' logos. Below outlines what is inappropriate about the ABC Corp. text and Gartner logo usage:

- The specific Gartner report(s) is(are) not listed;
- Gartner only permits its logo to be used to promote a licensed reprint made available through a link;
- Gartner does not allow vendors to make claims or assumptions as to why it has been included in our research;
- We do not allow reprint purchases to be referred to as “free”. Instead, we allow it to be called “complimentary”.

- The Gartner logo is used in association with a licensed reprint made available through the Download Report link;
- An appropriate Gartner summary has been included as a lead-in to the full report;
- The reference to "free" research is no longer visible.
